Reception on the occasion of the Independence and Unity Day

Address by Ambassador Dr. Božo Cerar.

Since 2005, on December 26, Slovenia has celebrated its Independence and Unity Day, commemorating the proclamation of the official results of the independence plebiscite in 1990.

However, it was on December 23, 1990, that 93.2% of eligible voters came to the polls to declare with an overwhelming majority of voters (95% of those who voted and 88.5% of all eligible voters) that Slovenia had six months after the plebiscite to conduct disassociation talks with the other Yugoslav republics and persuade foreign countries to grant recognition to the new state. The plebiscite took place following the first multi-party election in Slovenia in April of 1990.

To honor the 23rd anniversary of the independence referendum, Ambassador Dr.

Cerar and his wife, Dr. Martina Skok, hosted a celebratory reception on December 23, for the members of local Slovenian community and their families, many of whom contributed to Slovenia being recognized as an independent country by the U.S. and international community.

In his address, Ambassador Dr. Cerar underlined the importance of the plebiscite, held twenty-three years ago, which led to the declaration of independence on June 25, 1991, and on December 23, 1991, exactly one year after the referendum, to adoption of the Constitution of the Republic of Slovenia, its first constitution as an independent and democratic state. On the occasion of the reception, Ambassador Dr. Cerar and his family wished all the guests a merry holiday season and a happy new year 2014.

Slovenian food and wine were served on the joyous occasion.

Baking Christmas Potica at the Tennessee Consulate

The Slovene Consulate in Tennessee sees introducing Tennesseans to Slovene culture and vice versa as a major part of its mission. The baking of the Christmas potica roll cake in Slovene-American homes may well be one of the most enduring traditions from the "Old Country." The recipes handed down through the generations on ancient butter-stained scraps of paper are remarkably similar across the American continent.

Gerry Moll, Shelley Mangold and Diette Crockett roll out the sweet, lemon-flavored dough on a floured cloth.

Lydia Pulsipher and Maja Djorcev show the team how to spread the walnut-honey filling.

Recently in Knoxville, Tennessee members of the local community were invited to the Slovene consulate to participate in the elaborate ritual of baking two kinds of Potica: walnut-honey and tarragon-cottage cheese. From start to finish, the process took five hours, including the time for the dough to rise; but Slovene wine was served!

The story of potica in America might be interesting to compile. If you would like to contribute to that story, contact Lydia Pulsipher at lpulsiph@comcast.net

A long day of baking is rewarded by slices of potica and some excellent Slovene organic wine.

In 1965, Dr. Jose Mihelič copied this recipe from his sister Karolina for his daughter Lydia on an old manual Underwood typewriter.
